CHAPTER 4 UNIT-BASED PRODUCT COSTING

QUESTIONS FOR WRITING AND DISCUSSION

1. Unit costs provide essential information needed for inventory valuation and preparation of income statements. Knowing unit costs is also critical for many decisions such as bidding decisions, and accept-or-reject special order decisions.
2. Cost measurement is determining the dollar amounts associated with resources used in production. Cost assignment is associating the dollar amounts, once measured, with units produced.
3. An actual overhead rate is rarely used because of problems with accuracy and timeliness. Waiting until the end of the year to ensure accuracy is rejected because of the need to have timely information. Timeliness of information based on actual overhead costs runs into difficulty (accuracy problems) because overhead is incurred nonuniformly and because production also may be non-uniform.
4. For plantwide rates, overhead is first collected in a plantwide pool, using direct tracing. Next, an overhead rate is computed and used to assign overhead to products.
5. First stage Overhead is assigned to production department pools using direct tracing, direct tracing and allocation. Second stage individual departmental rates are used to assign overhead to products as they pass through the departments.
6. Departmental rates would be chosen over plantwide rates whenever some departments use more overhead resources than others and if certain products spend more time in some departments than they do in others.
7. Plantwide overhead rates assign overhead to products in proportion to the amount of the unit-level cost driver used. If the products consume some overhead activities in different proportions than those assigned to the unit-level cost driver, then cost distortions can occur (the product diversity factor). These distortions can be significant if the nonunit-level overhead costs represent a significant proportion of total overhead costs.
8. Low-volume products may consume non-unit-level overhead activities in much greater proportions than indicated by a unit-level cost driver and vice versa for high-volume products. If so, units will receive high-volume product costs.
9. If some products are overcosted because of complex design, the term product mix or size is used.
10. Nonunit-level overhead activities are those overhead activities that are not highly correlated with production volume measures. Examples include setup, material handling, and inspection. Nonunit-level cost drivers are causal factors—factors that explain the consumption of nonunit-level overhead. Examples include setup hours, number of moves, and hours of inspection.
11. Product diversity is present whenever products have different consumption rates for different overhead activities.
12. An overhead consumption ratio measures the proportion of an overhead activity consumed by a product.
13. Departmental rates typically use unit-level cost drivers. If products consume nonunit-level overhead activities in different proportions than those of unit-level measures, then it is possible for departmental rates to move even further away from the true consumption ratios, since the departmental unit-level ratios usually differ from the one used at the plant level.
14. Agree. Prime costs can be assigned using direct tracing and so do not cause cost distortions. Overhead costs, however, are not directly attributable and can cause distortions. For example, using unit-level activity drivers to trace nonunit-level overhead costs would cause distortions.
